

Country Alliance: the best way to put the Greens last

The Country Alliance party says that voting for it is the best way for people who are concerned about Greens policies to put the Greens last.

Spokesperson, Russell Bate, said that his party has put the Greens last in the country upper house regions where it is running candidates. He said his party has also run an intense media campaign highlighting its concerns over Greens policies.

“People are concerned about the extreme policies of the Greens including their heroin trials, consolidation of farms, the introduction of an inheritance tax, locking up of public land and attacks on traditional family values,” he said.

“We’ve made it very easy for them to put the Greens last by having them at the end of our preferences. All they have to do is vote for Country Alliance on the large ballot paper ‘above-the-line’”

Country Alliance is campaigning on issues relating to the quality of infrastructure and services in country areas and access to public land.

For media comment contact Russell Bate

Website: www.countryalliance.org

Admin: admin@countryalliance.org / ph 0425 746 066

Friday, 24 November 2006